Byrd: School counselors have kept up with the necessary changes

ways including:

*Aiding schools in referring students for mental health services.

*Provision of brief counseling services.

*Conducting trainings on mental health topics.

*Attending various meetings where a mental health perspective or consultation is beneficial.

As ocps.net states, "The years between childhood and adulthood represent a critical period of transition and significant cognitive, mental, emotional, and social change. While adolescence is a time of tremendous growth and potential, navigating new milestones in preparation for adult roles involving education, employment, relationships, and living circumstances can be difficult. These transitions can lead to various mental health challenges that can be associated with increased risk for suicide."

Counseling our youth today is a much different task than it was many years ago, yet our school counselors have kept up with the challenge.

One aspect that I think is important to share is the counselors are able to assist in linking students to community agencies for school-based counseling services or private counseling services.

Finding resources or navigating choices can be difficult for parents when they are worried about a child's mental health. The school district has a referral system of community partners that work with students.

On ocps.net, under the student services tab, you can find a list of partner agencies that our counselors refer out to that work with our students in the school setting. Some agencies have counselors assigned to school sites as well to work with students.

There are great resources available to families that need them, all you have to do is ask. If you would like assistance to find mental health services for your child, reach out to your school counselor, the staffing specialist, or the SAFE coordinator at your child's school.

Thank you to all the school counselors who help our kids reach their full potential every day. You are unsung heroes and we see you and appreciate you!

lots of GameStop's shares. This triggered a massive short squeeze that caught Melvin Capital off guard. Melvin's strategists apparently had no exit plan in the case of the market turning against them, so they got roasted by the short squeeze, suffering massive losses.

One interesting aspect of this debacle is that the number of shares of GameStop that had been sold short reportedly exceeded the total number of shares in existence. That means that some sellers were short the same shares at the same time. I'm not sure if that is even legal, but surely federal regulators need to look into that anomaly.

The individuals who bought GameStop made huge amounts of money – the money that the hedge funds lost – from the short squeeze that they had caused. We shouldn't feel sorry for the hedge funds. They only allow high-net worth individuals to invest with them because they know that the investment techniques they use – leverage, derivatives, short sales, etc. – are very risky. Thus, when a massive loss actually materializes, there is nothing unfair about it. It was simply the consequence of the risks they deliberately took.

However, instead of letting the short squeeze take its natural course and eventually come to an exhaustion point, at which the stock price would likely collapse, thereby inflicting huge losses on those still holding the shares (the "longs"), the so-called powers that be in the financial world intervened and tried to check Melvin's losses. We probably don't know yet who all these "powers" are, but we do know that they included brokerage firms that arbitrarily limited the number of shares of GameStop and certain other securities that individual investors were permitted to buy. This was designed to halt the short squeeze, and so prevent individual investors from making more money at hedge funds' expense – essentially changing the rules of the game in midstream, rigging the market in favor of the wealthy Wall Street insiders.

The Impact of Covid-19 In Child Care Facilities in Florida

My name is Melody Bostic and I am the owner of Bright Little Gifts Learning Academy Inc. Prior to the unknown assailant known today as COVID-19, we lived what we called an ordinary life. At this time, however, life has been anything but ordinary.

I have parents, who are afraid to leave their home, and they are more at risk of contracting the virus. We wear masks, wash our hands, spray surfaces to kill bacteria, etc. Our expenses are up, our income is down.

I have been serving the Central Florida area for approximately 11 years with a Child Care facility.

Over 1,645 licensed Child Care facilities are not now operating in the central and southern parts of the state. Currently, we are operating at a 66 percent deficit, due to COVID. Within the next six months to a year, based on the current data, I personally may be forced to close my doors.

This will leave the community I serve at risk for a greater hazard of child abuse and neglect which will further hinder our society as a whole. My wishes are that we annihilate this virus called COVID, so that we may restore our communities and livelihoods and we can continue to stay in business – America's child care matters.

REGAL

Regal has temporarily suspended operations at all theatres all theatres until further notice. This is in response to an increasingly challenging theatrical landscape and sustained key market closures.

Please check back soon. We look forward to serving you again, as soon as possible.
