Summer is right around the corner and with it comes the dreaded hurricane season. While the start of hurricane season officially starts June 1, now is the time to review a few important preparations to make before a storm.

“We know how important it is to prep early. With little to no notice, severe storms roll in with fierce winds. And after they’re gone, they can leave behind thousands of dollars in damage. By following a few simple tips, people can be better prepared for any storm,” stated James Maltby, owner of Maltby’s Tree Service and Landscaping.

Clear gutters of leaves, branches and other debris to make sure your water from heavy rains has free movement away from your home or business. Make sure gutters are firmly attached and directs water away from the home or building. Sprinkler systems should always be in the off mode if a storm approaches. Hurricanes and even severe storms are known for lots of rain, so too much of a good thing is not good. Saturated soil coupled with high winds lead to uprooted trees, especially trees with shallow root systems.

“You can help your trees better endure vicious winds and intense rain. We inspect your trees for risks. We know exactly what structural issues pose a risk. By having your trees professionally pruned before a storm, you can reduce the chances of downed limbs, or worse, trees that split, uproot or fall. Keeping trees healthy, pruned and structurally sound helps minimize accidents,” stated Maltby.

Having a completely hurricane-proof yard is next to impossible, but the decisions you make before a storm hits can determine how well your home or property survive the fiercest of storms. “The goal is to achieve a healthy and strong structure with an open canopy. This allows air to flow through the branches freely and, in some instances, the tree can actually protect the house itself by serving as a buffer,” noted Maltby.
