

Fentanyl: Keep Naloxone handy

 both Obrador and Chinese President Xi Jinping,” Moody said.
 Both countries have been identified by U.S. federal and state law enforcement agencies for creating the illicit fentanyl crisis. Chinese mafia and gangs ship fentanyl precursors to Mexican ports, where cartels and their operatives manufacture fake prescription pills and lace other drugs with fentanyl, fueling the fentanyl crisis, the DEA and other agencies say.
 Traffickers then bring deadly drugs across the border using migrant warfare as a way to distract and avoid law enforcement, experts say.

 The DEA has published several public safety alerts about the dangers of fentanyl. Florida has also published resources through its Dose of Reality, One Pill Can Kill website. It’s Fast Facts on Fentanyl toolkit includes a DEA Emoji Drug Code to educate parents about how dealers are selling illicit drugs targeting minors through social media apps.
 FAF points out that synthetic opioid (fentanyl) poisoning is still the leading cause of death among Americans between ages 18 and 45.

 Americans are encouraged to have Naloxone on hand, a drug that’s proven to reverse opioid overdoses and fentanyl poisoning if administered quickly enough. It’s available in all 50 states and the District of Columbia. It’s accessible for free and low cost online, through a range of community organizations, and through pharmacies with and without a prescription and with or without insurance

Byrd: Schools need more support

 The arts programs are another area where this shows up: Students in our Title I schools have limited transportation which results in limited practices that are available after school, which results in less training and opportunities.
 When one school has a world-class drama program that turns out students that receive offers from the top drama schools in the country, and another high school can’t have after-school practices because the students have to work to provide for their families or they don’t have transportation, there is no comparison in the programs.
 Tutoring and college prep is another big area of inequities: Many parents in more affluent areas spend thousands of dollars on test prep for their children to ensure good scores for college admissions. This is money many families don’t have and this creates a big gap in college opportunities for kids.
 The federal government recognizes these inequities and addresses them through the Title I program by providing extra funding to these schools. Title I schools are identified by their poverty level.

 We have several Title I schools in Apopka including Zellwood Elementary with a 60 percent poverty level; Wekiva High with a 61 percent poverty level; Dream Lake Elementary with a 63 percent poverty level; Lakeville Elementary with a 65 percent poverty level; Piedmont Lakes Middle with a 68 percent poverty level; Lovell Elementary with a 74 percent poverty level, and Wheatley Elementary with an 85 percent poverty level.
 OPCS does a LOT to address equity and is always looking for ways to help the situation. For example, several years ago, all schools were retrofitted with rubberized tracks when some schools had them and the athletes were better able to train because of them.
 There are several other initiatives that are in place to help as well. When I ran for office, I wanted to focus on bringing the same opportunities that were available to other parts of the district to our area.

 I brought the first K-8 school to the area. We have increased the number of schools of innovation, and we have expanded the magnet programs including the first culinary magnet in all of Central Florida at Wekiva High School.
 These are all opportunities that allow kids to experience new and exciting curriculum that will better prepare them for the opportunities that lie ahead. It gives them the same opportunities that other kids have. It’s all about opportunity.
 There is still so much work to do and I am fully committed to ensuring that all of our kids have the same opportunities and chances in life. This is what drives my work every day. We all have to have the same commitment to our community, our schools and our children.
 Every child deserves opportunities. Every child deserves a chance.

Moore: Investment value stressed

 opment fees, loans for start-ups, rebate sales tax, increasing business land, and increasing density or height requirements.
 For example, regeneration policies in the United Kingdom are much more focused on urban policy than in the United States. The Brits have spent more than $6 billion in what they call high deprivation areas based on an index. They weigh the following: employment, health deprivation and disability, education, skills, and training, geographic access to services, and housing. Some 8,414 neighborhoods were evaluated and ranked with this index.
 Government regeneration efforts target the most-challenged of these neighborhoods. National policy toward regeneration has evolved from simple property-led regeneration to more comprehensive strategies that embrace the social and environmental aspects of urban decline. Under conservation leadership in the 1980s “immediate action and visible results” was stressed. In the 1990s, the emphasis shifted toward the broader-based agenda. The awareness increased about the importance of monitoring and assessing the value of the investments. The positive and negatives of this approach were evaluated to say that developers appreciate the easy and cheap land, but the challenges and extra costs of partnerships for the wrap-around services was a barrier.

 I believe we must build affordable housing nearby to services such as public transit, shopping, medical services, quality educational facilities, etc. A comprehensive look at South Apopka would easily come up with the lack of shopping options, childcare facilities, and medical offices. And let us never forget the importance of access to jobs which pay a living wage. We must remedy the lack of amenities by actively seeking out and incentivizing businesses to locate in these lower-income areas.

 I have just such a project this year where I hope to recruit a Publix back to the Lockhart/North Pine Hills area. I will be promulgating a petition throughout the nearby neighborhoods and taking the county’s economic development team with me for a visit. I will keep you apprised of my progress.

Hayden: Be patient, not neglectful

 be a lot less prepared for our usefulness when our dream became a reality.
 So many times, I have wanted to jump right in the middle of something and, ignoring the detour, I fall flat on my face. Why? Because if I had taken the detour, my preparation for that something would have been complete, and I may have decided that was not for me. A snowstorm changed my immediate desire, but it could be a multitude of different detours that we need to pay attention to. I’m not saying to discard that dream but wait for the storm to clear and be aware when an opening comes for that dream to materialize. The Bible says, “Wait upon the Lord.” That wait means be patient. It does not mean, don’t do anything. It means to keep busy in the meantime, and you will find your mind will relax and be able to learn things God wants to teach you while you are waiting.

 Did I ever get to fulfill my dream of cowboying? You bet! I leased 440 acres of land and bought a herd of 14 head of registered black Angus cows and a bull by the name of Hercules. I kept buying cattle and ended up with 126 head of cattle, three horses, and a herd of 10 swine (pigs).
 God detoured me for a while, and during all that time on that detour, I was learning what was essential for running a ranch and cowboying. Ranching has as much to do with planning, bookkeeping, buying, and selling as it does with chasing hard-headed cattle on horseback, and had it not been for the detour, a lot of that would have gone unlearned.

 If you are in the middle of a snowstorm, and you are desiring to fulfill a dream, be patient and watch for the detour. You have a purpose, and if you will keep busy while you are waiting, God will teach you the necessities of what it takes to be productive in that purpose. There is a song “Detour” and part of that song says, “For the better things I find, should’ve read that detour sign.” Use the detours for learning, not for yearning.
